Brief Game Overview:

After the last gathering in the woods of Chopwell, it was decided a new location to meet was wise, and so the People met at a locus in Penschaw, underneath a hill. Going into the spirit realm to meet, they quickly became reacquainted, or introduced themselves, as the call had produced a larger number of responses in this month.

The group were interrupted by the presence of a man, claiming to be a National Trust Ranger. Confusion set in as to how a human was able to cross into the realm, but this was explained as he was a self-confessed “dabbler” in runes. Miakoda took him away for a while, during which he experienced his first Change.

The rest of the group were kept occupied, as strange hallucinations took hold. Several members heard someone else in the group say “Who are you? This is MY territory!” and responded with anger at this person. However, none of the People fell for this trick of...whatever it was, and proceeded to go outside, back into the physical world.

The appearance of three spirits brought tension into the group. Fire, it was now discovered, had been saying the words that people had heard. However, he didn't stay long, as he and a form of Emotion departed, leaving Technology as a messenger for the Court. A long debate began on the possibility of a ceasefire. Some felt that having a ceasefire whilst terms were displayed was wise, however, others felt this was another way of saying “We Surrender”.

During the entire night, several people received messages from an unknown source, all detailing the same message: “Private Argentyne, we know where you are, we are coming for you.” This message was generally repeated in various forms, also injuring a few of the People when it appeared in SMS form on the mobile phones present.

Captain Argentyne wasn't having a good night. After witnessing the damage to Miakoda's van, she now found herself bombarded with questions about this message. More so, the message seemed to indicate that the people responsible thought it was Miakoda who was Mirax. At one point, she found herself with “hippy” clothes on, which was infuriating, then frightening as they emitted a web-like substance as she tore them off.

Tensions between the People escalated, as the newly formed pack, The Nail Guns, led by the alpha, Scott, found themselves criticized by Kara, who had earlier cast a ritual to drive dark forces from the wand of Miakoda. Whilst the pack attempted to ascertain the identity of the people hunting Mirax, a ritual was cast, with little success in the way of finding out information, however Mirax and Scott were infuriated, after a night of frustration and tension, and decided to teach Kara a lesson about insulting pack members.

James, the Ranger who had changed, was now a member of the Nail Guns also. In this first night as a fully-fledged member of the People, his rage and support of his pack manifested in his Death Rage. The alpha of the City Patrol dealt quite well with this by simply grabbing and suffocating him till he passed out

A reappearance of faces on the walls occurred, yet all attempts to communicate with them failed. The group left, filled with tension from the night, and seeking a lot of answers to a vast array of questions.
