Brief Game Overview:

Eric Gervais and Catriona Mckenzie were the first to arrive at the cooling tower and Catriona took the fetish that had belonged to Bearclaw that was now in the possession of Eric and spoke to the spirit within it to find out more information. At the end of the discussion Catriona added an extra clause that the fetish was only to be used for the benefit of the city and the spirit was rebound. The fetish was handed back to Eric. A new Uratha arrived with his ship having recently docked for repairs. An Emissary from Earl Grey was sent to speak with Catriona as she had been asking questions within the last month of spirits around the edge of the city.

Kara and chase arrived shortly after having seen some men in Black suits outside the cooling tower who'd apparently driven off after they'd been noticed. Shortly after that a new face arrived that claimed to be an Uratha yet had none of the outward appearances of one. He claimed to be called Eats-metal or Andrew Pragnoll. He seemed to be a walking breach of the veil and seemed to know a lot about the current situation within the city. He did have the ability to bend metal with touch but it didn't seem a reliable skill. Rather than just killing him off as seemed the popular vote Catriona decided to ensure he was less walking and sent him back to her house. They moved as there appeared to be more men in black suits appearing and watching them.

They moved to Chopwell woods, where they discussed various things that had been happening over the past few months and discussion over how to deal with the situation with the courts. It was decided that trying to align with a court or just causing trouble between them. While in the woods a vision appeared before them showing them Selwyn captured and being forced to work for the court of technology awakening spirits. The 33rd were busy overhead, and when called down were willing to do a deal to help find Selwyn, they got paid 10 essence as they found him within the hour.

He was in the Monument Mall. They went to talk to the spirit of the metro to discover whether it was aligned with the court of technology or not. It turned out that it wasn't and while it didn't agree to help exactly they bought tickets and boarded a train and went to Monument. The train stopped outside the station and they all got off the train and looked around for something that could point them towards Selwyn. They headed towards a small security room a bit further into the tunnel. Breaking the door down they terrified the security man inside.

While Kara talked the man into believing that it was an inspection they looked over the monitors to see if they could see the room or anything that looked out of place. One room seemed out of place, they found out where it was and headed through the station to the room. The room was at the back of the bus pass office, which was staffed by some ridden. Just as some of them were about to leave one of the ridden attacked Kara and a fight broke out. Catriona and Chase used the fight to have a look around at the back of the office, all they found were some machines that would appear to have been awoken and had the spirits removed.

There was no sign of Selwyn. Part way through the fight Mr Anderson ran to the security office to destroy the evidence that would have been recorded on the cameras. They ran and as they got to the platform and a train magically seemed to appear just as they got to the platform.
